The Poetry of Maternity. Edition No. 1

Description:
Before a thought, a creation, a piece of writing can begin, there needs to be the conception of an idea, the seed of a beginning. Just as a woman can become pregnant with a child, she can also become pregnant with words, a story, and a way to tell that story.

Speaking from the point of view of a mother poet/poet mother, the author explores the language with which women poets write the experiences of maternity. How does a woman write her story or experience once she emerges from a journey so common and seemingly connective, yet intensely isolating and removed from the world outside her body? Is this language unique to women?

This book is a discussion amongst poets, theorists, and the author leading one through the labyrinth of language to the final revelation or discovery: there exists a movement toward expanding our given language expressly to give voice to the previously taboo experiences of the female body. This book intends not only to explore this language, but to give voice to the maternal – to celebrate it, learn from it, and acknowledge its essential importance in our literary canon, our collective history, and our overall human experience.
