SOUTH ASIAN WOMEN’S EXPERIENCES

FOLLOWING ABNORMAL PAP SMEAR RESULTS. Edition No. 1

Description:
This ethnographic study approached this problem by examining South Asian women's descriptions of their experiences of receiving abnormal Pap test results and of their follow-up diagnostic evaluations. Little information exists about women's experiences following abnormal cervical screening results particularly within the context of current health care services and structures, and regarding their perceptions of the adequacy of the information, counseling and support provided. Obvious issues such as language, cultural values, and beliefs, along with underlying societal, individual and institutional factors that co-exist with health care providers' ability to effectively communicate were described by the participants. Although some health providers attempt to provide culturally sensitive care including the use of interpreters and language-specific printed information for women who do not speak English, others lack the resources to provide such care. Obvious issues such as language, cultural values, and beliefs, along with underlying societal, individual and institutional factors that co-exist with health providers' ability to effectively communicate were described by the participants.
