Abstract
The 'A+' rating on Hazelwood School District, Mo.'s series 2006 certificates of participation reflects the appropriation risk associated with a lease purchase agreement and rental payments derived from a guaranteed energy savings contract initiated between the district and Ameresco Inc., as well as the general creditworthiness of the district. As a matter of Missouri state law, school districts are generally restricted from transferring money from teachers’ or incidental funds (general instructional operating funds) to the capital projects’ fund for payment of lease obligations. One exception is that a transfer of this type is allowed to repay the costs of “guaranteed energy savings performance” contracts. The district does not plan to institute a levy for lease payments because debt service on...
