Summary
SDI's "The South Africa Defense Industry - Competitive Landscape and Strategic Insights to 2017: Market Profile" is an essential source of information covering the top companies of the defense industry in South Africa.

South Africa's defense sector is highly dependent on domestic procurement and, as a result, the majority of the market is controlled by state-owned Denel. Many South African defense firms enter into joint ventures or collaborations in order to acquire technology or gain funding. With a limited market size, the competition within the industry is rife, and defense companies are now looking to exports in order to compensate for the lower demand in the domestic market.
