Financing infrastructure projects: Regional capital markets gain ground

Description: Latin America is seeing a wide range of sources interested in taking part in financing current infrastructure projects. The presence of the capital market, through bonds created for these projects, among other instruments, has increased and pension funds are playing an increasing important role. These institutional investors have substantial resources, and the long gestation period of the projects provides a good fit with their investment needs.

INCLUDED IN THIS MONTH’ EDITION:
Capital market on the rise Signs of new impetus in the capital market include last year¿s issue of the first bond for a Latin American port in Peru, along with the method of financing wastewater treatment plants, also in that country.
Huge potential Direct and indirect investment in infrastructure by pension funds in Chile, Colombia, Mexico, and Peru amounted to only 11.2% of their total portfolio at the end of 2011.
BNDES, still predominant Between January and May of 2013, the national development bank of Brazil disbursed about US$9 billion in the infrastructure sector, 19% more than in the same period of 2012.
