Infrastructure Investment in Central America Set to Take Off

Description: Throughout Central America a series of infrastructure mega-projects have been announced, especially in logistics and port infrastructure involving investment of several billion dollars, as countries with both Atlantic and Pacific coasts seek to position themselves as international trade corridors. Yet opportunities appear to be more feasible with projects that have not been accompanied by such fanfare, many of which are related to urgent needs. Such projects include the modernization and building of roads, increasing capacity at ports, airport construction and revamping railways.
