Europe's printing industry is somewhere between stagnation and recovery. While there are no clear signs of a return to better times, there are some indicators of economic recovery that should not be overlooked. In addition, the industry's share of advertising spending (one of the most important factors influencing demand and production in the printing industry) in Europe has been increasing again since 2004 and is expected to grow by three per cent and more in each of the years 2005 and 2006. Furthermore, despite the low growth of population in Europe, the number of households and managerial jobs continues to grow as does the proportion of income available for education and information. All this stimulates the demand for newspapers, magazines, periodicals and books.
