Global Feed Pigments market - Growth, Trends And Forecasts (2014-2020)

Description: Feed pigments are substances that are either of natural origin or synthesized industrially. Feed pigments are gaining importance due to various benefits they offer apart from the traditional pigmentation to growth in several stages of life cycle. They have also been linked to oxidation-preventing mechanisms and enhance the immune system. The feed Pigments market is projected to be growing at a steady CAGR of 3.8%.

Rise in global meat consumption appears to be the major driving factor in the market. Restraints in the market include manufacture and management costs for synthetic pigments, whereas natural pigments like Marigold are mostly seasonal plants heavily depending upon weather and other external conditions.

Asia Pacific is the largest market with China merging as the forerunner with a huge market share. Other traditional markets include countries like India, Brazil and Mexico among others. Owing to the global growth trends, leading companies have been investing in the R&D to capitalize and establish and expand their businesses in the market.
