
Description: The 11th annual edition of the “Scottish Energy Map - Electricity Transmission and Distribution (including Renewable Energy)” was launched at the Scottish Renewables annual conference in Edinburgh on 24th/25th March. This updates the situation since 2014. The Scottish Energy Map shows all electricity generating projects in Scotland over 1MW in size. It includes both conventional and renewable energy technologies. It includes wind, wave and tidal, biomass, biogas, hydro, EfW, landfill and sewage gas, solar PV.

Projects which are built, under construction and consented are shown by symbol together with project developer or owner together with generating capacity of the project. Along with the generating projects the map shows the transmission and distribution grid with transformer stations from 400-33kV. A new feature on this map is that it shows the wind resource data in the background. Speaking at the release of the new map John Coleman, chief executive said “The Scottish Energy Map is one of our first renewable energy maps. The 2015 edition is a complete redesign and revision of the map including the electricity grid data. This year we have added generalised wind speed data as a coloured background. Looking at this together with the grid network and the distribution of wind farms it is easy for the user to see why projects are located where they are. It could also be a useful tool to see where wind projects could be located in the future.”
