Britain - Electricity Transmission and Distribution Grid Map

Description: This is another first for the company. This large map (1400 x 1000mm) shows the British Transmission and Distribution system from 400-33kv on one sheet. The map was launched and first distribution was at the Scottish Renewables annual conference in Edinburgh on 24th/25th March.

The "Britain - Electricity Transmission and Distribution Grid Map" is a very detailed map. Along with the transmission and distribution grid it shows and names all transformer stations down to 33kv and the major generating sites over 10MW that are attached to the grid regardless of generating method. Speaking at the release of the new map John Coleman, chief executive said “There is almost one man years work gone into this map and it is the result of requests from developers looking for connection point and alternative connection points for their renewable energy projects. Other useful information that the map contains includes the areas covered by the different electricity distribution companies and also includes enlargements of busy urban are included as insets.
