Latin America & Caribbean Insurance Alert

Description:
Interest in Latin America, and its insurance market, has picked up as growth in the developed world has slowed. In recent years global insurers have been increasing their participation in the Latin American sector and key growth drivers include economic, population and income growth.

Latin America's economies represent about 8 per-cent of world gross domestic product, whereas the Latin American insurance sector represents less than 3 per-cent of total global premiums, with a total value of around $150bn in 2014. Latin America Insurance Alert has conducted research into the Latin America (and Caribbean) insurance sector on a daily basis. It is clear that the 'power-house' is Brazil, accounting for about half of the entire regions premium volume, Mexico trailing at about 16 per-cent of the total.

Latin American & Caribbean Insurance Alert bring together the news, results, mergers and significant happenings into a digestible format.

There are 12 issues published annually.
