Executive Summary

The global crop industry has been growing rapidly since the past several years mainly due to increasing demand of food, its flexibility and availability. Among the several varieties of crops available in the market, the demand for crops such as wheat, rice, soya beans, peanuts, sunflower, cotton, dry edible beans, potatoes among others are on a rise due to its easy availability.

Globally, the major factors contributing to the growth of Crop insurance industry is the higher agricultural insurance premium from China, India, and Thailand. Along with the Asia-Pacific region; European countries have had some form of crop or livestock insurance for more than a century. They are now mature markets with high penetration rates and offer comprehensive risk coverage for farmers. The developing countries that have succeeded in setting up a strong crop insurance system (India, China), show that this success has been due, in large part, to public support granted through premium subsidies or reinsurance.

Growth of the crop insurance industry could also be attributed to North America which introduced the revenue-based crop insurance and, more recently, from emerging markets such as China, India and Brazil, driven by rapidly increasing insurance penetration. Agriculture is seen as a diversifying risk to other insurance lines of business and is attracting more and more reinsurance capacity and collateralized reinsurance. Crop Insurance companies are launching new schemes and adopting new strategies in the insurance industry sector and making significant investments.
