Home Networks Newsletter

Description: The market for home networks is about to take off, driven by the 15 million homes with two or more PCs requiring interconnection. Sensing the potential opportunity, large players like IBM, Lucent, Intel, 3Com, Microsoft and Compaq to name only a few have formed Home Networking business units poised to pursue multiple approaches to home networking. This newsletter will provide coverage of this fast evolving market.

Home networking has not grown in the last decade as expected even though standards exist. These standards are for low-speed wiring and protocols that do not meet the future demands of the digital age. Groups like VESA, 1394, Home Phoneline Alliance and the Home Wireless Alliance are only a few groups that have announced plans to develop standards to fill this need.
