Summary
The electronics and electrical market was hugely impacted by the poor economic environment. However, an early change of consumer recovery was seen in financial year 2014. Consumer demand for small domestic appliances, smart TV's, and the ongoing increase in smart phone ownership drives the electrical and electronics market in the UK. Online remains as the most preferred channel among the consumers to shop for electrical and electronics products over the forecast period.

Key Findings
- Sales of electrical and electronics appliances accounted for 7.2% of total retail sales in 2014.
- The sector will witness a sluggish growth over the forecast period, as consumers continue to postpone their big ticket purchases.
- Online will be the most preferred channel which is also expected to be the fastest, as well the largest channel group surpassing the other channels in the forecast period.
- The practice of providing huge discounts on Black Friday, especially on electronic products by the retailers in the US, has become more prevalent in the UK as well.
