
Description: Animals like humans also suffer from diseases and hence require proper care from veterinarians, farmers and pet owners. Improving the health and well-being of companion animals, livestock and wild animals and treating them is the foremost objective of animal health industry. Companion animals are the animals that are kept by people for companionship, protection and enjoyment whereas food producing animals are those which are raised in agricultural setting to produce commodities such as food and fiber and thereby serve the purpose of feeding humans. Animal health products, also known as veterinary medicines are pharmaceuticals, vaccines and feed additives used to keep animals healthy. These medicines help companion animals live longer and healthier lives and increase productivity of livestock.

Increasing animal meat consumption globally, rising ageing population, improving economic conditions with rise in the global GDP, increasing urban population, faster and cheaper regulatory approvals, increasing scope for Biologics and Oncolytic and improving drought conditions in high plain regions of the U.S., are the major factors contributing to the growth of animal health market. However, the growth of the market has been hindered by certain challenges including major threats from new entrants and generic companies, entrance of other players in food retail space and increased cost of product development.
