Regional Views Issue 50 MENA Economic Outlook: Charting choppy waters

Description: London – The Regional Views series identifies factors behind medium to long-term economic trends in our region. Our forward looking perspective allows us to place current developments in the region within a broader context and a long-term view.

While the global economy is set for a gradual pick up, the outlook for MENA remains tepid, but individual countries continue to post varying degrees of resilience.

- How have MENA countries reacted so far to lower oil prices as reflected by slower growth and budget pressures?
- To what extent are GCC countries weighed down by the burden of their subsidy regimes? What are the main obstacles to subsidy reform?
- Amid an uncertain economic and political climate, which countries exhibit signs of steady growth and solid economic and financial fundamentals?
