Executive Summary

Peripheral artery disease (PAD) is a medical condition in which arteries become narrow due to build-up of plaque on the vessel walls. Peripheral artery disease affects the arteries of arms, legs or neuro-vasculature, other than those that supply the heart and brain.

Peripheral artery disease is also known as Peripheral Vascular Disease (PVD) and Peripheral Artery Occlusive Disease. Plaque that deposits in the arteries is made up of fats, cholesterol, calcium, fibrous tissue and other substances in the blood. Plaque formations can grow large enough to significantly reduce the blood's flow through an artery.

Treatment of Peripheral artery disease requires multiple approaches, depending on the individual patient. There are two main approaches for the treatment of PAD. The first approach is endovascular treatment, which includes stenting, ballooning and atherectomy. These different treatments can also be used in combination, such as atherectomy with stenting. The second approach is surgical treatment, which includes bypass surgery and amputation.

The global peripheral artery disease market has increased with a healthy growth rate in 2014 and is expected to increase further in coming years. The main driving forces for PAD market are increasing... population, especially the age group of 65 and above, rising global healthcare expenditure, technological advancements and favorable reimbursement rates for PAD treatment. Yet there are some challenges which PAD industry faces such as restenosis (re-occurrence of PAD post treatment), inappropriate diagnosis and limitations of existing devices.
