Construction Management and Organisational Behaviour

Description:  Construction Management and Organisational Behaviour Maureen Rhoden with Brian Cato

Construction Management and Organisational Behaviour provides a comprehensive account of management ideas and practices, focusing on human relations within construction management. Easily accessible and suitable for use in face to face or in distance learning situations, it discusses a range of themes and trends covering evidence based management practices in the construction industry. A variety of learning elements are included, such as chapter summaries, case studies, reflective questions, useful websites and annotated further reading lists. Final year and post graduate students of construction and civil engineering, as well as managers at all levels within the construction industry, will find this an ideal introduction to the range of soft skills they need to acquire to enable them to become successful construction managers.
