Weekly China Economic Report

Description: A weekly report that analyzes new industrial demand trends in China, changes in government policy, and new Chinese economic and social issues likely to affect various financial markets and the economy. Rebuttals to media misinformation are often provided. Report's focus is on both Chinese consumer and industrial markets.

The report also provides regular weekly updates on changes in Chinese air pollution levels. China-bound coal and iron ore shipments are also tracked on a weekly basis and are analyzed in each report. In addition, the report monitors Chinese lending rates and also includes weekly analysis on the Chinese equity market.

Subscription is typically purchased by: clients with any financial exposure to the Chinese economy; global traders and analysts of commodities, global and Chinese equities, and various global financial instruments; and companies active in industrial production and global seaborne trade. Customers purchase the subscription as it allow clients to view real-time how China is changing.

Also, the subscription provides a great deal of non-consensus information and views (including explanations of where current media reports and economic reports on China hold flawed views and misinformation).

More than a Subscription:

In addition to receiving the weekly reports, subscribers have full access to speak with analysts by email. All questions are typically answered on the same day received, and normally always within 24 hours. Subscribers also receive special mid-week updates whenever the publisher anticipates that new developments are likely to occur and/or if major new events are taking place. It is very important for Commodore to remain in constant contact with clients, to the degree needed by each subscriber.
