Jordan is a relatively underdeveloped economy in the Middle East and has been swamped by an influx of refugees from Iraq, Syria, and Palestine for years. Violence and hostility in neighboring countries have driven more and more refugees to Jordan in the past few decades. The need to play host to such a large number of refugees has emerged as a key area of concern for Jordan, necessitating it to tighten its defense capabilities. This was the primary factor driving the country's defense budget during the historic period.
