
Description:
Latin America owes most of its GDP to the commodities market, since five of the top 10 mining countries, globally, are situated in the Latin American region. Most of these commodities are viewed as considerable equipment for imports in between the years, 2006 and 2013.

Currently, Brazil is the world's seventh largest economy, while Mexico is growing at a rapid pace with estimations to become the tenth largest economy by the year 2018. However, in 2014, the combined growth rate for GDPs in the region was at its slowest rate since 2009, due to the sluggish growth in China, the biggest commodity importer from this region.

The manufacturing industry is performing at a slower rate due to periods of recession in the manufacturing industries of Brazil and Argentina. However, most of the contribution comes from the motor vehicles sector in Mexico. Automotive and food industries have always taken advantage of the low-cost labour from Latin America. China's move of joining the World Trade Organisation (WTO), has changed conditions. Now, there is a rise in the growth of Chinese labour wages; although, significantly lesser than Latin America, freight costs are considerably less. But the growing energy prices, gaps in domestic supply chain and the lack of skilled labour are other factors that contribute to the decrease in competitiveness of the region.

Due to these factors, Latin America's Safety Connection Devices market is estimated to be worth $xx billion in 2015 and is projected to witness a CAGR of xx.xx% during the forecast period to reach $xx billion by 2020.
