
Description: The global hair care market today is worth well over US$ 75 billion. One of the most important factors enhancing growth in personal care adoption is the rapid rate of urbanization across the Asian and other developing markets, holder of the mass of the global population. A good presentation is said to be associated with competitiveness at work, and a number of studies suggest that good looking people are increasingly favoured in employment, academics, and general perception. This explains the massive growth in demand for hair care in emerging markets, and high level of innovation and R&D in saturated markets like that of Europe, North America, and others.

The hair care market is segmented on the basis of types of products, methods of distribution, regions and dominant players in the market. Issues which drive the hair care and colour market commonly include damage due to pollution, dryness, dandruff, improving quality of hair, care for straight, wavy or curly hair, and a number of other purposes. Hair care market consists of various brands with different hair care functionalities (but not limited to cleaning, conditioning and hair styling). A few products available in hair care market are colorants, hair spray, conditioners, styling gel, hair oil and shampoos (incl. of the upcoming class of dry shampoos), and even appliances for drying, curling, straightening, etc.

An increase in hair related issues among the consumer class across the world has led to a number of product innovations accommodating for prevalent (and changing) consumer tastes and preferences, by dominant and emerging hair care market stakeholders, globally.

An upcoming class in this market is the herbal sector. In past few years, herbal care products have also witnessed increase in demand due to increasing consumer awareness about the ill effects of harsh chemicals and substances used by the companies, and the benefits of natural products, and education about their active ingredients.

A trend spurring consumer awareness about personal care, inclusive of hair care, is the trend of beauty blogs. While growth has increased across urbanized sectors, it has mainly been driven by working class women and men, and affluent families.

Desire to cover grey hair and to prevent early balding so as to look presentable and even fashionable has increased the sale of hair care products like home coloring kits, shampoos, and conditioners. Hair colour market growth is high, and it is expected to reach US$ XX billion by the end of 2018. Furthermore, global hair care market is estimated to reach $xx billion by 2020 at a CAGR of XX.XX%.

Major markets for hair care and colour will be in the high growth Asian, European, American and Latin American markets. Due to increasing demand for various hair services like hair spa, hair care treatments are some of the other factors augmenting the demand for hair care products.

Distribution channels such as direct selling, e-commerce, departmental stores and supermarkets also play a key role in increasing the revenues of the companies. Companies have adopted various distribution channel models to expand their offerings and tap potential consumer segment.

Some of the players commanding the global hair care market share are L’oreal Group, Procter & Gamble, Unilever, Henkel, Shiseido, Johnson & Johnson, Estee Lauder, Avon, Yves Rocher, Combe Inc., Natura, Conair Corporation and Neutrogena.
