Town Planning Review

Description: Town Planning Review has been one of the world’s leading journals of urban and regional planning since its foundation in 1910. With an extensive international readership, TPR is a well established urban and regional planning journal, providing a principal forum for communication between researchers and students, policy analysts and practitioners. To mark TPR's centenary in 2010, it is proposed to publish a series of 'Centenary Papers' -- review papers that record and reflect on the state of the art in a range of topics in the general field of town and regional planning. TPR is edited from the Universities of Liverpool and Manchester (UK) and Clemson University (USA) and is supported by an international Editorial Board who resource the journal with a wealth of disciplinary and multi-disciplinary expertise.

Submitted Papers:
TPR welcomes both full-length research papers (8-10,000 words) and shorter research reports (3-3,500 words) exploring the:
- theory and analysis
- method and techniques
- history and law
- policy and practice
- governance and institutions of all aspects of town and regional planning in advanced economies and emerging industrial states, and particularly those relating to the fields of:
  - spatial planning
  - regional analysis and development
  - regeneration and renewal
  - local and regional economic development
  - community planning and participation
  - social cohesion and spatial inequalities
  - housing area planning and development
  - urban design and conservation
  - environmental planning and sustainable development
  - transport planning
  - rural planning and development TPR follows the practice of double-blind refereeing of submitted papers and research reports.

Other Features: Among TPR's other features, the widely welcomed 'Viewpoint' gives the opportunity for a personal view to be expressed on a planning topic of current interest. Other regular features include 'Forum' discussions, in which a number of contributors debate issues of planning policy, research and education and for which the editors welcome suggestions, and, book reviews, including occasional review articles and review forum contributions, which allow differing views to be aired on a particular publication.
