Country Forecast China Updater

Description: The president, Xi Jinping, has emerged as an increasingly authoritarian leader as he looks to buttress his position and that of the ruling Chinese Communist Party (CCP). In 2016-20 controls over civil society and the media will be tightened and the anti-corruption drive will continue. The lack of governance reform will inhibit long-term social and economic development.

Opposition to Mr Xi within the CPP has been largely suppressed but could re-emerge suddenly in the forecast period. Factional tensions within the party will mount ahead of a 2017 reshuffle of the politburo standing committee, the CCP's top decision-making body. However, The Economist Intelligence Unit's core forecast is that Mr Xi will strengthen his position at the meeting.

China's growing geopolitical power will generate tensions with its neighbours, although the country's financial largesse will provide a partially offsetting effect overseas. Territorial disputes in the South China Sea will remain unresolved and the risk of a military clash (unintended or otherwise) in the region will persist in 2016-20.
