Healthcare Papers

Description: HealthcarePapers was created to bridge the gap between the world of academia and the world of healthcare management and policy. It focuses on the Canadian experience with changes in healthcare systems, and draws substantially on international research and writings.

Often scholars in universities focus their publications on informing their peers in other universities about their work. This is, of course, an important aspect of the university rewards system. In HealthcarePapers, however, there exists an exchange of ideas between scholarly research and implementation of results where they will have the most impact. In each issue one topic of substantial interest to the field of practice is selected. Criteria requires that the theme be of such considerable intrigue and complexity that, if explored in depth, it has the potential to change health policy.

HealthcarePapers is considered peer-reviewed; the main paper of the issue is subjected to intense scrutiny and debate by a wide range of experts. An expert known for his or her qualifications in the field of interest will be asked to write a paper on the topic. This paper will form the main focus for the issue and therefore will consider the topic in ample depth. This main paper may take a controversial point of view and does not necessarily need to cover the topic from all angles.

To ensure that the topic is covered from many different perspectives, eight to ten other experts will be asked to review the original paper and provide their comments. It is anticipated that these reviewers will round out the topic by providing six to ten pages of commentary to augment the original perspective. Clearly, these reviewers will be chosen for their complementary knowledge and expertise. The result of this extensive process is interesting and exciting content.
